1. What are your long-life aspirations or aspiration?
2. Who or what inspired your aspirations?
3. If you didn't have your aspirations what else would be an aspiration(s) of yours?
4. Who or what is your motivation to achieve your aspirations or aspiration?
5. What does success look like in your aspiration(s)?

My long-life aspiration is to buy some land so I can create a new but old way of living, a way without money. We all live in the same world and the main thing we chase is money. Money gets us all the resources we need to survive and without the money, some of us might end up homeless or somewhere in the streets or doing something that puts us lower than low. Seeing everyone around me stressing and wasting most of their life for money worries me. So I think to myself, this can't be the way we're supposed to live, there must be another way. Right there I told myself I'm going to continue my career and raise enough money to create this way without the financial worry. If this wasn't my aspiration then my aspiration would still be to work hard enough to get the world a better place. For example, I want to build a company where these buildings are placed all throughout the world to help get people off the street like bums and prostitutes. These organizations will provide the homes for them and even teach them the education they need and the life skills they will need so that they wouldn't have to go back. Every time I see someone standing or sitting there asking me if I have any chance I can spare I feel bad and every time I try to do something for them because they have it worse than we do. So helping them will make me happy because I know that I'm doing all I can to make a person's life better and I just get soo happy when seeing others happy. Being successful for these aspirations is me getting all the things that are on my checklist done and me feeling like I have accomplished something every day. This is who Anesia Reese is. Questions for Shayne:

1. What do you do for success?
2. What do you want to achieve and why?
3. What is your essence and how do you identify it?
4. If you were a role model what would people look up to you for and if you had to change, what would you change and why?

5. What are expectations for leadership and how would you act under the leadership role?

The one million dollar question people usually ask would have to be what do you do for success? As we all know success is something we all aspire to have but not many achieve that success in their lives but to answer that question. The things or routine I do for success would have to be cooperating all of the education I have had in my lifetime to what I'm doing. I find something to be passionate about and motivate myself to achieve that aspiration. The very essence of fashion motivates me to continue to be artistic and competitive, after all, the fashion world does not slow down for anyone. The way I identify the essence of fashion would be fashion is everything a culture or group of people have. May it be wearing something for their culture to what they wear on their feet, or maybe it's even accessories. Fashion is the way we perceive people regardless of what their true personalities may be. Fashion is the way we present ourselves and how we show the world who we really are. The essence of fashion is widely ranged in many ways but sometimes it can even be just the way you feel about yourself and how you look. Now in the fashion industry, as you continue to get more popular and more out there, people may look at you as a role model. If I had to be a role model, people would look up to me for confidence and self-esteem. I am very confident and have high self-esteem even though times do get tough, you must always believe in yourself. There's not anything I would change about myself, for there is one thing I have learned. Never change for people when there isn't anything to change about yourself. Confidence and self-esteem are something I want aspire people to all have. I know how tough it can be when someone doesn't have the confidence to be who they are. It gets exhausting after a while of hiding from your true self. I eventually want to create a fashion line that helps people regain their confidence and self-esteem and become the person they were always truly meant to be. As most people should, we all expect leaders to inspire change and lead that change. Leaders should also be able to actively inspire others to do great. Even when leaders make mistakes, as they are normal human beings, they should create accountability for themselves. Leaders are the people who the world looks up to be not all of those leaders are perfect. If the role of being a leader fell to me. There would be many things I would want to change. Starting with the fact the way people treat people who don't dress like others. Not everyone has the same taste in fashion, people shouldn't judge others just because of the way they may dress. Not everyone can afford to dress nice due to personal reasons of theirs. I want to be able to inspire people to be better and have that confidence in themselves that they always wanted. I want to be the person, people can come to and ask how to be confident and headstrong. This is Shayne Hamilton, the person who knows they can bring more to the fashion culture and even make it better with designs of his own, a person who sees fashion as a main culture appearance. Shayne likes to care for all types of people through his career, he thinks of everyone and how different they are. He doesn't segregate genders and ignores the way they are. Shayne will be the future fashion.
